A: Your screen shot (as well as the one on the other site) appears to be of a program called eSataSoft, available on the developer's website. According to their website, this is the developer of the product you have mentioned. A: This answer is not direct to the question but it may be useful. A smart computer user has the habit of using Windows Disk Management tool to format external USB drives such as a pen drive, microSD card, memory card and external hard drive etc. When we do this Windows Disk Management tool asks for permission to format the drive and if it accepts it does the format. However sometimes this permission is not given and the external drive will not be able to be formatted. Now the user has to buy a new drive to accommodate
