It is often desirable to print or mark a document in only selected portions of the document. Typically, such a desired portion is identified by a code, such as a barcode or a two-dimensional barcode. There are several techniques used to print the desired mark in the document. These techniques include using a separate ink ribbon or pen having differently colored areas, using a wide-format printer with movable printheads that are moved to print the desired code, using thermal transfer of the desired code from a separate member to the document, and using a fax device. The present invention relates to a method and apparatus for performing signal processing on a voltage level signal. More specifically, the present invention relates to a method and apparatus for producing a signal with d.c. and a.c. components that are phase shifted by 90.degree.. In many signal processing applications it is necessary to convert the amplitude of a high frequency signal to a lower frequency. This is especially true in communication applications where a transmitter mixes a.c. and d.c. signals to produce a lower frequency signal. For example, in a communications system a.c. and d.c. power amplifiers are used to drive modulated, high frequency signals. These signals are mixed by the receiver to produce a low frequency signal. Frequently the mixing requires producing a signal that has a center frequency of zero and a sinusoidal sideband that is 90.degree. out of phase with the center frequency. Further, the d.c.
