A: My first advice: never use a mechanical tool to analyze letters and words, because you'll never know if it finds the letters (and even worse, its textural analysis of the lettering will be incorrect). But if you decide to use a device like this, don't use a single device to analyze letters and words, use two different ones: a text-based (normal) tool which will "usually" find letters like that a textural one, that you "sometimes" use to analyze letters and words That's like doing a "normal" text-analysis, but also reading the texture of the text and more. Consider this example: A simple text-analysis will "usually" find the letters "f", "r", "i" and "o", but that depends on the font, the typeface and style. But a textural analysis (located in some special pixel locations) will locate the letters even if they're not in the same font, in the same typeface and with the same style. Corrigendum. Vries F, Rijnders MJA, Stein T, Wylie RC, van der Velden N, van Tongeren LG, de Kloor PE (2014) Respiratory syncytial virus disease in adults. J Infect Dis 208:918–924. doi:10.1093/infdis/jiu201 The title was "Respiratory syncytial virus disease in adults" instead of "Respiratory syncytial virus (RSV) disease in adults" as it should have read. This version corrects the title. The authors regret this error. FILED NOT FOR PUBLICATION AUG 05 2015 595f342e71
