Formerly known as "Lit," LIT is a dark-themed, puzzle horror game with 16 stages of light-themed dungeon crawling. Your mission? Help Jake lead his emo, dorky boyfriend, Ray, through the perilous and often off-putting halls of Crescent High in search of Rachael, who disappeared into the darkness hours ago. Matching pawns across various rooms helps you solve a variety of puzzles, including light bulb, match, matchbox, matchbox cover, matchbox spring, lamp, and window based puzzles. The game offers control schemes for both keyboard and joypad, and is compatible with both keyboard and mouse for PC gamers. Keyboard and joystick gamers, however, have the advantage as you have more precise movement control. Upon completion of the game, you'll be able to unlock a bonus character that was exclusive to this version of LIT. He is known as Stanley, and he is a crazy, bespectacled, puzzle-solving scientist from the 1930s. He is the perfect companion for any PC-only gamers. “The idea of the finale of this campaign was very challenging for us. The whole of the mission is about realizing a long-held dream of the player. But how do you do that?”; “We had a very different approach to the concept from our previous efforts. In the first few scenes of the finale, we wanted to create a feeling of epic terror. So we tried to change our perspective and use only the visual atmosphere of the game.” “It seemed to work for us. But we couldn’t let the players jump around from one scene to another. The pace was too frenetic. The players wanted a satisfying and full-scale experience. That’s why we decided to bring the music directly to their ears.” “As the tension is rising, we wanted to find a moment of realization that leads directly to the player’s satisfaction. After all, what is the role of music in the narrative and the gameplay, really? We chose the moment that the player is being ejected from the hall. The game allows the player to assume any point of view. At that moment, there is no way to get out of the room, and it’s clear what the player has to do. The emotional state that the player is in is similar to a triumphant ‘bravo’ – the moment you get what you wanted.” “A look back to the concept of the musical composition is that the premise of ‘near death’ involves two main factors: the fear of death and the uncertainty about the future. When the player falls into a water fountain, he finds himself in a state of some sort of ‘exiting’. He has overcome his fear of death, but he also finds himself in a moment of uncertainty, because his immediate future is entirely unclear. “The music helps shape the idea of ‘getting out of the room’. It’s about the moment of victory and completion. The whole piece is about the state of realization of the player. We wanted it to be a quiet, tranquil moment. The feeling of elation is accompanied by a surging rhythm. In that context, there is a much higher pitch on the first part of the piece than in other parts. This helps form the feeling of the ‘final stage’, where a clear idea of the player’s success is achieved.”

Ashes of Lemuria: The True Cause of the Native American Indian's Mysterious Disappearance is a multimedia project by Julie Corliss and John Thackara, which was released in 2009. It deals with the mystery of the disappearance of Native American tribes. Guided by the Incan Trail, the author and narrator is pitted against the FBI and their politics, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, biological warfare, top secret projects and the elements of time. In the video travelogue, Corliss details suppressed and blurred images of America's covert agenda; and in the companion book, Corliss and Thackara present the only current hypothesis of what occurred, which questions the official hypothesis of an Ice Age occurrence. This work of nonfiction drama form was awarded both a nomination for Best Radio Journalism as well as a finalist at the Mysterious Movie Media Awards in 2012. Background The author of the book was a federal prosecutor and grew up with Native American mythology. "When I was 12, my brother Jim was abducted by a Bigfoot and I was the only person who believed him," she said. "And I don't mean that our next door neighbor said it was my brother. The neighbors were the followers of a religious movement with a bunch of light-skinned people." She began to explore the mythology and then while going through the Tarot cards, "I found the Rosetta stone of the Lucifer card which told me that in the beginning, a small race was created and they were tipped over and now the currently dominant species were created by the fallen race." Along the way to the secrets that have been covered up, she reveals some of the evidence that she came to believe was the true reason for the disappearance of the North American Indian. "There is no other man on earth that knows more about the truth about the disappearance than I do. So to reveal that truth, I have to reveal a lot of authority and a lot of people who would like to see me laid out in the gutter without the rest of my network effect." Development "None of us are native to North America," she says to the trail, "and I know what it takes to reclaim that ancestry and own that history. I lived most of my life not knowing much about my Native American genealogy until I came across the hidden history of my heritage." Today, she has retrieved of shamanic art that she says has been covered over by the FBI
